Because noncognitive qualities like grit, curiosity, self-control, optimism, and conscientiousness are often described, with some accuracy, as skills, educators eager to develop these qualities in their students quite naturally tend to treat them like the skills that we already know how to teach: reading, calculating, analyzing, and so on. And as the value of noncognitive skills has become ...

By Barb Bauer. The 1880 Federal Census of the United States was one of the first censuses to include detailed information about the country's inhabitants (before 1870 only basic information about head of household was collected). One of the pieces of information new to this census year was data about illness and disability.
